

Cameron, Alexander Douglas
Private
North Nova Scotia Highlanders
Royal Canadian Infantry Corps
F – 13142

Alexander Douglas Cameron was born on 19 December, 1919 in Fairmont, Antigonish Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

He was the third child of John James (Jack) Cameron and Minetta (Mary) Campbell. He had an older brother, Daniel James and an older sister, Margaret Elizabeth but she died in January, 1943. His younger brother, John Clare, was already in military service abroad at the moment that Alexander Douglas enlisted for overseas service. There were twelve more brothers and sisters of which the youngest, Elda Ethel, was eight years old when her brother was sent to Europe. The family is Roman Catholic.

Alexander Douglas attended school from the age of six until he was twelve, reaching grade 7. He reported later that he would have liked to continue in school but that he had to go to work. Until he joined up he worked as a lumberjack in winter and on a farm in summer.

Three months before his twentieth birthday, on 9 September, 1939, he joined the army. He was found to be a healthy young man, 5 ft. 6 tall, weighing 140 lbs, with blue eyes, brown hair and good teeth. He was placed with the 86th Heavy Battery as a gunner.

After several years in the 86th, 104th and 108th Battalions, he volunteered in August, 1943 for service overseas. Although he had several times been away without leave he was found suitable for service in Europa. He had to be patient for some time, staying in Shelburne with the 108th Battalion. Then on Tuesday, 18 April, 1944 he was transferred to the Windsor Transit Camp, Nova Scotia, spending the summer months in Windsor, Halifax and Debert.

On Friday, 13 October he embarked for England and a month later was sent to the European mainland where he was placed as reinforcement with the North Nova Scotia Highlanders

Alexander Douglas Cameron was killed on Tuesday, 27 February, 1945 at the age of 26, during the Rhineland Offensive in Germany. His parents were informed on 16 March.

It is not known exactly where he died. He was temporarily buried in Bedburg, Germany.

On 9 July, 1946 his parents heard that he has been reburied at the Canadian Military Cemetery, Groesbeek, plot IX. C. 7.

16th March, 1945.
